RE-MANUFACTURED ENGINE

HERE IS WHAT YOU GET, STEP BY STEP
Engines are completely disassembled. Engines and parts are thoroughly cleaned in tanks, using a caustic solution. They are then steamed externally and internally under high pressure. All blocks are rebored. The valve seats are reset and ground to the correct angle and true surface. Special pilots are used to insure true seating.
After reboring, each cylinder is wet honed. A uniform surface is maintained with close tolerance. Blocks and parts are washed in kerosene to remove abrasive materials collected during the rebuilding operations. Crankshaft oil passages are cleaned with brushes and each shaft is recentered. All crankshafts are reground and micro-finished; a plus or minus .00025 tolerance is maintained. All oil passages are cleaned again, sharp edges are beveled and the bearing surfaces polished to a glass finish. The camshaft lobes and bearing surfaces are reground. This insures smooth, quiet valve operation. Insert type connecting rods are reground to exact factory specifications. In babitted rods the old babbit is removed and the rods are fitted to insure perfect bonding. The rods are then reground using the finest metals. The rods are grooved and set to the correct underlines. A very close tolerance is maintained. Bushings are diamond bored in order to obtain 360-degree bearing surface. Operating clearances are held to a plus or minus .0001. All rods are matched and are of equal length and exact weight, then they are aligned. This prevents boosing or piston scoring due to bends or twists in the rods. Finally all component parts are installed by trained mechanics. All engines are tested under their own power.
